In a hard-fought game on a muddy gridiron at Cummings field, amid rain and anow, the football team of All Hallows College defeated the Salt Lake High School by a score of 10 to 5. Both teams played fast and hard, but the element of luck was with the College.

Parks, who came into the game for All Hallows fifteen minutes after it started, to relieve Cush, who was hurt at right half, made the first touchdown by running fifty yards through a broken field back of the goal defended by the High School. The latter made its score after four minutes of play in the second half, by hard line bucking on the part of Richardson. Neither side kicked goal. The last touchdown was made by P. Fitzmaurice of All Hallows on a fumble kick near Salt Lake's goal after the watch of one timekcoper said the half was ended, and the timeplece of the other gave a minute and a half more to play. This discrepancy caused wrangling, as the High School felt that it was being robbed in allowing to count the last touchdown which was made by chance, although the College had forced all the playing in the latter part of the second half in the High School sterritory.

by chance, although the College had forced all the playing in the latter part of the second half in the High School's territory.

Rooters were scarce, but those present were noisy. The heavy rain kept many at home, but the loyal followers of the same braced the inclement weather, cheering their own and jeering the opposing team. There were a few girls in the grand stand and they had no fear of injuring their voices by cheering.

The star of the winning team was Parks. His sensational run for the first touchdown was not his only brilliant play, for he had the faculty of being on the ball or on top of the man with the ball at critical times in the game. When Coach Tobin put him in to play right half he warned him that if he did not play hard he would be taken out. On fumbles he was an expert, and, being fast and clusive, made seemingly impossible gains. P. Fitzmaurice, the All Hallows quarter, and W. Fitzmaurice, the fourteen-year-old end for the College, were both good and advanced the ball many yards.

Richardson, left half for the High School, was the mainstay of his team lie was the only consistent ground-gainer on the field, and it was his plunges that brought his men their only accre.

The game was clean. Salt Lake was penalized twice for bolding, but slugging and tripping were absent throughout the playing. The boys played at a disadvantage, for the ball was wet and their ingers were cold, but they handled their plays well. The men were plastered with mud and scrambled and rolled on the sloppy gridiron indifferent to everything but the pigskin for which they hardled. Davis, fast right half for the High School, was barred from the game, even after he had dressed to play, for being deficient in his studies.
